NEW REQUIREMENTS FOR UST SYSTEMS North Carolina's Updated UST Regulations Effective June 1, 2017

The US Environmental Protection Agency updated the federal underground storage tank (UST) regulation 40 CFR Part 280 on July 15, 2015. These updates impact North Carolina's UST rules, 15A NCAC 02N Criteria and Standards Applicable to Underground Storage Tanks. The majority of the changes affecting North Carolina's UST rules are summarized below.

All forms mentioned below can be found on our website.

When a repair is made to any of the UST system components listed below, and to secondary containment areas of tanks and piping used for interstitial monitoring, the equipment must be tested or inspected (as applicable) within 30 days following the repair to ensure it is operating properly.

Monthly Walkthrough Inspections

Walkthrough inspections of spill prevention (spill buckets) and release detection equipment are required every month*. The UST-27 form should be used to record this monthly inspection.

The first walkthrough inspection must be completed, and recorded on the form, by October 13, 2018. The forms must be kept for 12 months.

Note: If you can document that you receive fuel deliveries that are 30 days or more apart, you can perform the spill bucket inspection before each delivery.*

Annual Walkthrough Inspections

Walkthrough inspections of containment sumps and hand-held release detection equipment are required every year (examples of hand-held release detection equipment include tank gauge sticks and groundwater bailers).

The UST-22B form should be used to record the yearly inspection of release detection equipment, and the UST-22C form should be used to record the yearly inspection of containment sumps.

The first walkthrough inspection must be completed, and recorded on the applicable form, by October 13, 2018. The forms must be kept for 12 months.

Overfill Prevention Equipment

Inspection of overfill prevention equipment installed before November 1, 2007* is required every three years.

Overfill inspections must ensure two things: 1. That the equipment is set to activate at the correct level, and 2.

that the equipment will activate when regulated substance reaches that level.

Also, flow restrictors (ball float valves) can no longer be used as an overfill method when replacing or installing a new overfill prevention device on or after June 1, 2017. If a ball float valve that is currently in use fails a test or inspection, then it must be replaced with a high-level alarm or an automatic shutoff device (flapper valve).

When replacing a ball float valve with a flapper valve, the ball float valve assembly must be removed. The ball float valve assembly can remain only if documentation is provided showing that the ball float valve will not interfere with the operation of the flapper valve. The ball float valve assembly does not have to be removed if a high-level alarm is used.

The UST-22A form should be used to record overfill inspections. The first inspection must be completed, and recorded on the form, by October 13, 2018. After that, an inspection is required every three years*.

Each UST-22A form must be kept for three years*.

 Note: Any overfill prevention equipment installed as part of a new installation or a replacement on or after November 1, 2007 must be inspected annually and documented on a UST-22A form. When an annual inspection is required, each UST-22A form should be kept for 12 months.*

Spill Prevention Equipment

Spill prevention equipment (spill buckets) must be tested every three years or be double-walled and the integrity of both walls monitored at least every 30 days*. The UST-23A form should be used to record tests of spill prevention equipment.

The first test must be conducted, and recorded on the form, by October 13, 2018. After that, a test is required every three years. ✓

Each UST-23A form must be kept for three years.

 Note: Spill buckets installed after November 1, 2007 must be double-walled, continuously monitored, as well as tested every three years (unless monitored using vacuum, pressure or hydrostatic methods). ✓*

Containment Sumps Used for Interstitial Monitoring of Piping

Containment sumps that are used for interstitial monitoring of piping must be tested every three years or be double-walled and the integrity of both walls monitored at least once per year*.
